Contributors

Jordan J. Ballor is a Doktorand in Reformation history at the University of Zurich. He is also a doctoral candidate in historical theology at Calvin Theological Seminary and his dissertation research is on the theology of Wolfgang Musculus. He has served as associate editor of the Journal of Markets & Morality since 2004.

Martin Calkins is assistant professor in the College of Management at the University of Massachusetts, Boston. He earned a Ph.D. in management from the University of Virginia, M.Div. and Th.M. degrees in theology from the Weston School of Theology, and an M.I.M. in international management from the American Graduate School of International Management. His academic interests include the roles of casuistry and virtue ethics in moral reasoning, the limits of cognition in moral deliberation, the concept of justice in secular and Muslim societies, and the ethical aspects of contemporary business issues such as China's and India's adoption of the automobile, whistle blowing outside the United States, pre-employment testing, and the widespread integration of computer and Internet technologies.

Julio H. Cole is professor of economics at Universidad Francisco Marroquín in Guatemala, and editor of the journal Laissez-Faire. He earned both his undergraduate degree (licenciatura) and his Ph.D. in economics from Universidad Francisco Marroquín. He is the author of several books, including Latin American Inflation: Theoretical Interpretations and Empirical Results (1987) and Elementos de Econometría Aplicada (2nd ed., 2006). He has also contributed to numerous scholarly and professional journals.

Robert F. Garnett Jr. is associate professor of economics at Texas Christian University. He taught previously at the University of Massachusetts, University of Texas at Arlington, Denison University, and the University of Southern Maine. He teaches the Senior Seminar in Economics, History of Economic Thought, Mathematical Economics, Research Methods in Economics, Intermediate Macroeconomics, and Directed Studies in Economics. He has published in a number of economics journals, including Review of Austrian Economics, Review of Social Economy, Review of Political Economy, Atlantic Economic Journal, Journal of Economic Issues, and Rethinking Marxism: A Journal of Economics, Culture, and Society. He has also edited several anthologies, including the forthcoming Pluralism in Economics and Economies (with Erik Olsen and Martha Starr) and Future Directions for Heterodox Economics (with John T. Harvey).

Contributors

Guido Hülsmann is professor of economics at the University of Angers in France. His previous teaching appointments include the Ludwig von Mises Institute, State University of New York at Buffalo, and the University of Paris—Assas. His current research areas include international monetary economics, the theory of money and banking, and basic conceptual and philosophical problems of economic analysis. He is the author of several books, including Praxeological Papers (2009); The Ethics of Money Production (2009); Die Ethik der Geldproduktion (2007); Ordnung und Anarchie. Essays über Wirtschaft, Politik und Kultur (2007), and has contributed to numerous scholarly and professional journals.

John Lunn is the Robert W. Haack professor of economics at Hope College. He taught previously at Louisiana State University, Miami University (Ohio), and the University of British Columbia. He earned his doctorate at the University of California at Los Angeles, specializing in industrial organization and international trade. He teaches the Senior Research Class, Microeconomics, and Industrial Organization. He has published in a number of economics journals, including European Economic Review, Southern Economic Journal, and The Journal of Legal Studies, as well as scholarly journals that focus on faith and economics, including Christian Scholar's Review, Faith & Economics, and the Journal of Markets & Morality.

Todd M. Rester is a doctoral student in historical theology at Calvin Theological Seminary, and most recently translator of William Ames, A Sketch of the Christian's Catechism (Reformation Heritage Press, 2009).

After more than 25 years in the business world including serving on the senior executive team of a $2 billion international corporation, starting a new business, and many experiences in between, Vicki TenHaken now draws on that background as an associate professor of management at Hope College. Classes she teaches include Management Decisions, Management Theory, Human Resource Management, and the Management Seminar. Professor TenHaken is on the Board of Trustees for Resthaven Patrons, a notfor-profit organization providing a continuum of affordable senior housing and services in West Michigan. Teaching is just the latest of Professor TenHaken's experiences at Hope College. She is a 1973 Hope graduate and a former member of Hope's Board of Trustees. Professor TenHaken earned her M.B.A. from Grand Valley State University, where she recently served as an Executive in Residence and received a Distinguished Alumni Award.

Contributors

Jonathan B. Wight is professor of economics & international studies in the Department of Economics of the Robins School of Business of the University of Richmond. He earned M.A and Ph.D. degrees from Vanderbilt University. His academic interests include the moral foundations of capitalism (Adam Smith) as well as the relationship of ethics and economics. He is the recipient of a number of awards, including co-recipient, In Character prize, John Templeton Foundation (2006); Templeton Award, Journal of Private Enterprise (2005); University of Richmond Distinguished Educator (2002); Paxton Award, International Association of Torch Clubs, Outstanding Paper (2001); Robins School of Business Outstanding Teaching Award (1997); Robins School of Business Outstanding Service Award (1995); Danforth Fellow (1980–1982); Doherty Fellow (1980–1981). The author of numerous articles, his books include Teaching the Ethical Foundations of Economics (with John Morton, 2007); Saving Adam Smith: A Tale of Wealth, Transformation, and Virtue (2002); and The Medical Offset Effect and Public Health Policy (with John L. Fiedler, 1989).

William C. Wood is currently professor of economics at James Madison University and the director of JMU's Center for Economic Education. Wood received his Ph.D. in economics from the University of Virginia in 1980 and has held faculty positions at Vanderbilt University, the University of Virginia and at Bridgewater College. Wood was the recipient of teaching awards at the University of Virginia and at James Madison University, where he was the 2001–2002 Distinguished Teacher in the College of Business. Wood was named in 2002 as an inaugural winner of the Southern Economic Association's Kenneth G. Elzinga Distinguished Teaching Award. Wood is also a past recipient of the Alpha Kappa Psi-Clifford D. Spangler award for research in risk and insurance and the Best Paper award for the Journal of Private Enterprise. He is the author of three books, more than twenty scholarly articles, and national economic education materials for school and adult audiences. Currently his research interests include industrial organization, behavioral finance, and economic education.