

Contributors

Charles W. Baird (PhD, University of California, Berkeley) is emeritus professor of economics, California State University, East Bay. He specializes in the law and economics of labor relations and is a consultant in that field.

Timothy J. Barnett (PhD, University of Kansas) is associate professor of political science at Jacksonville State University, Jacksonville, Alabama. He holds degrees in marketing and theology, and an MPA from Boise State University. A former president of the Alabama Political Science Association, Professor Barnett writes on legislative politics, constitutional federalism, monetary policy, cultural drift, and freedom of religion. His books include a closely researched work on conservative congressional cohorts, Legislative Learning: The 104th Republican Freshman in the House.

Ad de Bruijne (PhD, Leiden University) is full professor of Christian ethics and spirituality at the Theological University Kampen, the Netherlands. His main field of research concerns public theology, where he tries to bring the neo-Calvinist tradition into dialogue with contemporary debates and proposals concerning the public calling of Church and Christians in a post-Christendom context.

D. Glenn Butner, Jr. is a third-year doctoral student in theology at Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He hopes to dissertate on theology and microeconomic theory.

Contributors

David Paul Deavel (PhD, Historical Theology, Fordham University; BA in English and Philosophy, Calvin College) is associate editor of Logos: A Journal of Catholic Thought and Culture and adjunct professor of Catholic studies at the University of St. Thomas (MN). He is the 2013 recipient of the Acton Institute's Novak Award and serves on the Board of Directors of the Newman Association of America. His writing has appeared in a number of academic and public journals including Chesterton Review, Commonweal, First Things, Minneapolis Star Tribune, National Review, New Blackfriars, Nova et Vetera Society, and Touchstone. He lives in St. Paul, Minnesota, with his wife and six children.

Brian Dijkema (MWS, Institute for Christian Studies) is program director for work and economics at Cardus. Prior to joining Cardus, Brian worked for almost a decade in labor relations in Canada. He has also done work on international human rights, with a focus on labor, economic, and social rights in Cuba and China.

E. J. Hutchinson (PhD, Bryn Mawr College) is assistant professor of classics at Hillsdale College, Hillsdale, Michigan.

W. Bradford Littlejohn (PhD, University of Edinburgh) is director of the Davenant Trust, an organization dedicated to Protestant resourcement, and a member of Covenant Investment Advisors, LLC. His research and writing centers on early modern Protestant theological ethics and issues in contemporary economics and political theology.

Korey D. Maas (DPhil, University of Oxford) is assistant professor of history at Hillsdale College, Hillsdale, Michigan.

Sara Morrison (PhD, University of Western Ontario) is associate professor of history at Canada's only women's university, Brescia University College, affiliated to the University of Western Ontario, London. With a BA Hons degree in geography (St Hilda's College Oxford), she developed an early interest in resource management and environmental stewardship.

Donovan Richards (MA, Seattle Pacific University) is a content and project manager at See Seven Business Innovation. In his consulting work, he focuses on bringing theological application into the marketplace, inspiring clients to see their brand in new and inspiring ways.

Contributors

Kenman L. Wong (PhD, University of Southern California) is professor of business ethics at Seattle Pacific University. He is the co-author of Business for the Common Good (IVP Academic). His research has been published in journals such as The Journal of Business Ethics, The Journal of Management Education, and Christian Scholars Review.