

Contributors

Russell Dabbs (PhD, The University of Tennessee, Knoxville) is professor of economics in the School of Business at Lubbock Christian University, Lubbock, Texas. Dr. Dabbs also serves as chair of Academic Affairs for the School of Business.

Albert Gootjes (PhD, Calvin Theological Seminary) is an intellectual historian specializing in early modern theology and philosophy. He has translated numerous books and articles (Dutch, French, German, and Latin) into English.

Erik W. Matson (PhD, George Mason University) is senior research fellow at the Mercatus Center and Deputy Director of the Adam Smith Program at George Mason University. His research focuses on topics in eighteenth-century British political economy and moral philosophy, the relationship between economics and ethics, and contemporary issues in economic methodology. His work has been published in scholarly outlets including Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization, Journal of the History of Economic Thought, Review of Behavioral Economics, and Hume Studies.

Jonathan McIntosh (PhD, University of Dallas) is a fellow of humanities at New Saint Andrews College. He is the author of The Flame Imperishable: Tolkien, St. Thomas, and the Metaphysics of Faërie.

Steven McMullen (PhD, The University of North Carolina) is an associate professor of economics at Hope College and the executive editor of the journal Faith & Economics.

Paul Oslington (PhD, University of Sydney; DTheol, University of Divinity) is professor of economics and theology at Alphacrucis College. He writes on international trade, labor markets, and the history of economics.

Camryn Zeller (BA, Hope College) is an elementary school teacher at Great Hearts Arlington and a research assistant at the Center for Religion, Culture, and Democracy.